Yoga Service Council & Omega Offer Empowering Practices for Survivors of Sexual Trauma in New Book

‘Yoga and Resilience’ Edited by Danielle Rousseau & Published by Handspring Brings Together Leading Experts in Trauma & Yoga

RHINEBECK, NY – In the wake of the #MeToo movement, ongoing sexual justice activism, and growing empirical evidence supporting the benefits of yoga and mindfulness practices in managing the many impacts of trauma and stress, Yoga and Resilience addresses sexual trauma and yoga in an integrated and practical way. Calling on a diverse array of more than 25 leading experts in the fields of trauma and yoga, the book distills best practices to inform the fields of mental health, trauma-informed yoga, yoga service, and yoga more generally.

“The wounds of sexual violence are experienced by survivors long after an assault takes place. When taught with care and awareness, trauma-informed yoga and mindfulness can be valuable tools for healing from the physiological and psychological impacts of sexual trauma,” said Carla Goldstein, president of Omega and cofounder of the Omega Women’s Leadership Center. “We are proud to support this important body of work.”

“This work is a model for what collective inquiry and co-creation can successfully be. The depth of empirical and experiential knowledge that is embedded in this book is only possible because of the diverse expertise of all contributors. I know that the wisdom these experts have bestowed will profoundly impact the fields of both trauma-response, and yoga service,” said editor Danielle Rousseau, who is also an author of Best Practices for Yoga in the Criminal Justice System.

The partnership of the Yoga Service Council and Omega Institute began in 2009, when Omega offered space for a group of yoga teachers to come together and talk about ways to support those who worked with vulnerable and underserved populations. The council emerged from this initial gathering and offered the first annual Yoga Service Conference at Omega in 2012. As a result of the shared commitment to yoga and service, the Yoga Service Council and Omega decided to formally partner in 2014 to bring yoga and mindfulness practices into the lives of more individuals and communities who have limited access to these vital teachings.
